5 CRUZ, J.:

6 [1] The Defendant-Appellant, Heights Enterprises, appeals a judgment granting summary 7 judgment in favor of the Plaintiff-Appellee, Yasuda Fire & Marine Insurance Co., Ltd. The Superior 8 Court found that Heights was excluded from coverage under a general liability insurance policy due 9 to two exclusion clauses--a work product exclusion and a professional services exclusion. This 10 court, having heard oral arguments, and having reviewed the record and the applicable law, affirms 11 the trial court's decision based on the reasoning set forth below.

13 FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

14 [2] Yasuda brought a declaratory judgment action to determine whether Yasuda was obligated 15 to indemnify or defend Heights, based on a general liability policy. This cause of action was 16 prompted by an action brought by Fargo Pacific, Inc. against Heights, based on a contractual 17 agreement, for alleged defective workmanship for termite spraying done for the Perlas Courte 18 condominium project<sup>1</sup>. Fargo, as the general contractor, had previously been found liable to the 19 project's owner, Guam Land and Realty, Inc. (GLR), for damage to the project.<sup>2</sup> Heights was insured 20 by Yasuda at the time the underlying claims to this case arose. Heights obtained a Manufacturers' 21 and Contractors' Liability Insurance policy, a general liability policy. Universe Insurance 22 Underwriters (UIU), agent for Yasuda, issued the policy to Heights at the request of the company's 23 President, Norman Imamura. Imamura is a businessperson and the founder and president of 24 Heights Enterprises. Imamura earned a two-year degree in Accounting/Business Administration

25
26

27 <sup>2</sup>An action was conducted in Guam, although initiated in Hawaii before a panel, certified by the American 28 Arbitration Assocaition, by GLR against Fargo. Fargo was found liable to GLR for work on the Perlas Courte condominium project for the sum of $710,000.00 on February 16, 1994.

3 from the Honolulu Business College in Hawaii. Imamura requested the liability insurance policy; 4 however, he made no specific requests as to the inclusion of specific types of liability coverage, nor 5 did the insurance agent make any further inquiry as to any special needs. After receiving the policy, 6 Imamura "scanned" the policy, but did not fully understand it. However, Imamura at no time notified 7 or inquired of the insurance agent as to any questions or concerns regarding the provisions or 8 coverage of the policy that he did not agree with or understand.

9 [3] The general liability policy contained exclusions, two of which are at issue in this case. The 10 first is what is referred to as a "work product" exclusion which states that "this insurance does not 11 apply to: property damage to work performed by or on behalf of the named insured arising out of 12 the work or any portion thereof, or out of materials, parts or equipment furnished in connection 13 therewith." The second exclusion refers to "professional services" and provides that "this insurance 14 policy shall not apply to bodily injury or property damage due to . . . (D) the rendering or failure 15 to render professional services."

16 [4] Yasuda's first motion for summary judgment was denied on May 23, 1994 which Justice 17 Weeks, then a Superior Court Judge, on the basis that the case was not ripe for summary judgment 18 because genuine issues of material fact existed. A subsequent motion for summary judgment was 19 then brought by Yasuda on October 24, 1994. The court below heard oral arguments and entered, 20 on December 27, 1996, a written decision and order granting summary judgment in favor of Yasuda.
21 The judgment was entered on March 26, 1997 and a timely notice of appeal was filed on April 23, 22 1997.

24 ANALYSIS

25 I.

26 [5] This case is on appeal from the granting of a summary judgment motion in favor of the 27 Plaintiff-Appellee, Yasuda Fire & Marine Insurance Co., Ltd. The Defendant-Appellant, Heights 28 Enterprises, claims a misapplication of the law as well as the existence of factual disputes that

3 would bar the grant of summary judgment. First, an issue is presented as to whether the court erred 4 in finding that no factual disputes existed which would have supported Heights' argument for use 5 of the doctrine of estoppel. Secondly, there is the issue of whether the trial court erred in holding 6 that the liability policy held by Heights excluded coverage for the claims of Fargo Pacific, Inc. based 7 on the "work product" exclusion. Lastly, Heights raises the issue of whether the court erred in 8 finding that the "professional services" exclusion also excluded coverage for the Fargo claims.

9 [6] This court has jurisdiction over this case pursuant to 48 U.S.C. § 1424-3(d) and 7 GCA §§ 10 3107(a) and 3108(a). The trial court's granting of summary judgment will be reviewed de novo.
11 Iizuka Corp. v. Kawasho Int'l (GUAM) Inc., 1997 Guam 10, ¶7. A grant of summary judgment is 12 proper "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with 13 the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving 14 party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Guam R. Civ. P. 56(c).

16 Doctrine of Estoppel

17 [7] Heights argues that the doctrine of estoppel may be applied in situations to prevent 18 companies from denying coverage to an insured based on policy exclusions when the insured has 19 been led to believe that coverage existed. Ivey v. United National Indemnity Co., 259 F.2d 205, 208 20 (9th Cir. 1958). Heights argues that it could be construed that the UIU agent mislead Imamura as to 21 the nature and scope of the company's coverage, and, as a result, Imamura detrimentally relied on 22 the agent's representations in obtaining insurance from Yasuda. Heights attempts to portray Imamura 23 as an unsophisticated businessperson with limited education who is naive in negotiating insurance 24 coverage.

25 [8] However, the doctrine of estoppel also cannot be applied so as to broaden or extend the scope 26 of coverage when no such coverage previously existed. Baton v. Transamerica Insurance Co., 584 27 F.2d 907, 911 (9th Cir. 1978). Furthermore, although once the law in California, the courts of 28 California seem to have since abandoned the Ivey view by refusing to recognize the use of estoppel

3 or waiver for the purpose of bringing risks within a policy, which were not covered by the policy's
4 terms. Manneck v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 28 Cal. App. 4th 1294, 1303, 33 Cal. Rptr.2d 771, 777
5 (Cal. Ct. App. 1994). The reasoning reflected in the more recent California cases is the majority 6 rule. Estate v. Hapo Federal Credit Union, 869 P.2d 116, 117-8 (1994).

7 [9] Even under the minority rule, which applies estoppel where an insurer expressly 8 misrepresents a policy's coverage, the facts in this case do not seem to warrant the application of 9 estoppel. In this case, Imamura sought a policy for liability insurance, a general liability policy, 10 which is what he obtained. He did not specifically request an errors-and-omissions policy or 11 performance bond or specify certain risks against which he wished the company to be insured.
12 Furthermore, he failed to carefully read and review the policy and did not question its coverage.
13 Yasuda cites an older California case that was decided when California still followed the minority 14 rule—Taff v. Atlas Assurance Co., 58 Cal. App. 2d 696, 137 P.2d 483 (Cal. Ct. App. 1943). In Taff, 15 the court refused to extend coverage where the insured failed even to read the policy to discover if 16 what the insured presumed to be covered was actually included. Id. at 486.

17 [10] Imamura is a man with a higher degree of formal education, having received an Associate 18 Degree from a business college in Hawaii. Sophistication really is not the issue here, since this 19 concern is one of practicality. Imamura may have desired to obtain an errors-or-omissions policy 20 or a performance bond, but without making this desire known to the UIU agent, Heights cannot now 21 claim that it was defrauded and that Yasuda should be required to provide such extended coverage 22 under the general liability policy. A reasonable consumer would have expressed the risks against 23 which he wished to obtain coverage. A reasonable consumer would have subsequently read over his 24 policy to make sure it included coverage for those risks. A reasonable consumer would have gone 25 back to the insurance agent when the policy he received did not contain coverage for the risks which 26 he believed he had obtained coverage. These actions have nothing to do with sophistication. Yasuda 27 cannot be expected to have read Imamura's mind and in turn should not be held responsible for 28 insuring Heights for risks which were not included in the policy.

3 [11] The trial court clearly appears to have properly assessed the facts presented before it, and 4 there is no basis for estoppel under the majority view, and perhaps even under the minority rule.
5 Additionally, it is not clear what factual dispute Heights raises as an issue in this appeal. This court 6 chooses to adopt the majority rule and thereby refuses to extend coverage where such was neither 7 contemplated nor provided for in the policy itself.

9 II.

10 [12] A well settled general principle of insurance law is that, should ambiguities exist in the 11 language of the policy provisions, they are to be liberally construed in favor of the insured.
12 Stroehmann v. Mutual Life Ins., Co. of New York, 300 U.S. 435, 439 (1937) ("the rule is settled that 13 in case of ambiguity that construction of the policy will be adopted which is most favorable to the 14 insured."). However, in the absence of any ambiguities in an insurance agreement, the objective 15 rules of contract law apply, and the clear and explicit language governs. Bank of the West v.
16 Superior Court, 2 Cal. 4th 1254, 833 P.2d 545, 551-2 (Cal. 1992) (holding that "[w]hile insurance 17 contracts contain special features, they are still contracts to which ordinary rules of contractual 18 interpretation apply.").

19 [13] Therefore, the threshold issue is whether the provisional language of the policy is itself 20 ambiguous. If unambiguous, interpretation must express the mutual intentions of the parties. Id. at 21 545. However, if found to be ambiguous, the terms of a promise are to be interpreted in the manner 22 in which the promisor believed the promisee understood it at the time of its making. Id. "This rule, 23 as applied to the promise of coverage in an insurance policy, protects not the subjective beliefs of 24 the insured but, rather, 'the objectively reasonable expectations of the insured.'" Id. It is only at 25 the point when this rule fails to resolve the ambiguity that the general principle applies which 26 construes the ambiguity against the insurer. Id.

27 [14] Heights contends that the language of the work product exclusion and the professional 28 services exclusion are both ambiguous. Furthermore, it is Heights' contention that because the

3 provisions are ambiguous, those provisions should be interpreted in favor of coverage for the 4 insured. However, what Heights fails to do is establish how the language is ambiguous to begin 5 with. For ambiguities in an insurance policy to exist, it must be shown that a provision is capable 6 of two or more reasonable interpretations. Adler v. Western Home Ins. Co., 878 F.Supp. 1329, 1333 7 (C.D. Cal. 1995). "Courts will not adopt a strained or absurd interpretation in order to create an 8 ambiguity where none exists." Hollingsworth v. Commercial Union Ins., Co., 208 Cal. App. 3d 800, 9 805, 256 Cal. Rptr. 357 (Cal. Ct. App. 1989). Separate analysis of each provision must be made in 10 order to determine whether ambiguities exist and in whose favor the provisions should fall.
11 However, even an ambiguous policy is not to be so liberally construed as to provide an unreasonable 12 or forced interpretation or to provide extended coverage to the insured. United States v. A.C. Strip, 13 868 F.2d 181, 186 (6th Cir. 1989). "Language in a contract must be construed in the context of that 14 instrument as a whole and the circumstances of that case, and it cannot be found ambiguous in the 15 abstract." Bank of the West, 2 Cal. 4th at 1265.

16
17 Work Product Exclusion

18 [15] There is a split of authority as to the interpretation of when the work product exclusion 19 will exclude coverage under a general liability policy. The trial court chose to follow the line of 20 cases holding that liability from defective termite treatment is excluded under the work product 21 exclusion. There is varying authority which directs, respectively, the inclusion and exclusion of 22 coverage under a general liability policy construing a work product exclusion provision.

23 [16] There are two cases of import that support exclusion from coverage in the present 24 situation— Hawk Termite & Pest Control, Inc. v. Old Republic Ins. Co., 596 So. 2d 96 (Fla. Dist.
25 Ct. App. 1992) and Uhock v. Sleitweiler, 778 P.2d 359 (Kan. Ct. App. 1988). In Uhock, 26 homeowners brought suit against the exterminator alleging liability for termite damage to their home.
27 The exterminator subsequently sought indemnification from a second pest controller. Id. Judgment 28 was issued against the exterminator, garnishment was then issued against the exterminator, which

3 the court dismissed, and the homeowners appealed. Id. The court in Kansas had previously ruled, 4 and accordingly in Uhock held, that the work product exclusion language was unambiguous. Id. at 5 364. The court, relying on the reasoning found in Owings v. Gifford, 697 P.2d 865 (Kan.1985), 6 stated:

7       When an exterminator treats a home, warranties arise both under his contract with the 8 owner and by operation of tort law. Since an exterminator can control the quality of 9 his work, he is liable to the owner when the work is faulty. The risk that the 10 exterminator may incur liability under warranty is a normal part of doing business.
The exterminator may obtain a performance bond or purchase a guarantee of contractual performance for repair or replacement of faulty workmanship.

11 Uhock, 778 P.2d at 364. A general liability policy “is not a performance bond or a guarantee of 12 contract performance.” Owings, 697 P.2d at 865.

13 [17] In Hawk, the homeowner brought suit against the exterminator alleging negligence. 596 So.
14 2d at 96. The exterminator brought a declaratory judgment action seeking to determine its rights 15 under its insurance policy. Id. The work exclusion policy excluded coverage for "failure of the 16 insured 's . . . to meet the level of performance, quality, fitness or durability . . . represented by the 17 named insured" or due to "lack of performance." Id. at 97. The court found no ambiguity in the 18 language and determined it was a simple case of poor workmanship that was not covered under the 19 terms of the insurance policy. Id.

20 [18] In contrast, there are the cases of Hurtig v. Terminix Wood Treating & Contracting Co., 692 21 P.2d 1153 (Haw. 1984), Isle of Palms Pest Control Co. v. Monticello Ins. Co., 459 S.E.2d 318 (S.C.
22 Ct. App. 1994), and Scottsdale Ins. Co. v. Ratliff, 927 S.W.2d 531 (Mo. Ct. App. 1996). In Hurtig, 23 homeowners brought suit against Terminix for failure to correctly perform work under a contract to 24 inspect and treat for termites, which led to termite damage to the house. 692 P.2d at 1153. Terminix 25 moved for summary judgment on the issue of the it's coverage under the policy. Id. The court 26 granted in favor of coverage and the Appellate and Supreme Courts affirmed. Id. The Hawaii 27 Supreme Court issued a brief one-page opinion which reflected a 3-2 majority. The exclusion 28 provided that coverage did not apply "to property damage to work performed by or on behalf of the

3 named insured arising out of the work or any portion thereof, or out of materials, parts or equipment 4 furnished in connection therewith . . . ." Id. at 1154. The court relied on the general rule in favor 5 of coverage and held that the exclusion only applied to damages to the inspection and application 6 of chemicals. Id.

7 [19] At the time of oral arguments before the trial court in this matter, the Isle of Palms and Ratliff 8 cases had not yet been decided. Heights seeks additional support from the above two cases and 9 claims they demonstrate an emerging majority rule on the issue. In Isle of Palms, an exterminator 10 sought a declaratory judgment against the insurer, seeking a determination of coverage for an alleged 11 negligent preparation of a termite inspection report. 459 S.E. 2d at 318. The trial court held that the 12 inspection was covered under the terms of the policy and the appellate court affirmed this 13 determination, citing the Hurtig decision. Id. The court determined that the work product exclusion 14 did not apply in that case because "the only product or work of the insured is the inspection 15 performed by the Isle of Palms, these exclusions are clearly inapplicable, and do not remove the 16 Purchaser's claim from the scope of the policy or relieve Monticello of its duty to defend." Id. at 322 17 n.2.

18 [20] Lastly, in Ratliff, the court addressed the issue of exclusion from coverage for a negligent 19 inspection report for another pest control business. 927 S.W.2d at 531. The court determined that 20 under the general liability policy, the terms "occurrence" and "property" carried ambiguous 21 definitions contained within the policy. Id. As a result of the ambiguity, the court found in favor 22 of coverage for the insured and expressed the view that, if insurance companies do not intend to 23 cover the types of claims presented in that case, they should use language more specific to the risks 24 particular to the business being insured. Id. at 534.

25 [21] As the trial court concluded below, "[t]his Court finds the reasoning of Uhock and the 26 Hurtig dissent more sound than the somewhat wooden analysis presented by the Hurtig majority." 27 Yasuda v. Heights, Civ. No. CV0233-94 (Guam Super. Ct. December 27, 1996). We agree with the 28 trial court's legal conclusions and finds no cause to overturn the decision below. Although we are

3 concerned with ensuring that an insured is properly protected and receives the benefit of his bargain, 4 we must also balance the interests of the insurer in limiting its responsibilities.

5 [22] Additionally, there are clear distinctions between the Hurtig line of cases and the case at bar.
6 In Ratliff, there is no mention of whether the case actually involved the interpretation of a work 7 product exclusion provision in the insurance policy. Furthermore, in Ratliff, as in Isle of Palms, the 8 factual scenario involved termite inspection rather than termite treatment. In Isle of Palms itself, 9 although it employed a confused analysis, the court drew a definite distinction between inspection
10 and faulty workmanship. Hurtig did involve a mix of both inspection and treatment for termite 11 infestation; however, the Hurtig opinion is not persuasive to this court based on a lack of reasoning 12 to support the majority's position. In Hurtig, a two-justice minority issued a dissent in which they 13 opined that Terminix failed to properly perform its duties under the contract—to inspect and treat 14 the house for termites. Hurtig, 692 P.2d at 1155. The minority emphasized that the majority's 15 decision and reasoning would act to transmute a general liability policy into a performance bond, 16 covering the "business risks"<sup>3</sup> of an insured. Id. The dissent disagreed completely with what it 17 regarded as the majority's schizophrenic rational, noting the comparison between the case under 18 decision and those previous.

19 [23] We fail to see any ambiguity in the language of the work product exclusion here. It is also 20 important to note that alternate forms of insurance are available to an insured to protect himself 21 against the "business risks" which have been at issue in all of these cases--performance bonds, a 22 guarantee of contractual performance for repair or replacement of faulty workmanship, or omissions-23 and-errors policies. To allow coverage in the face of these exclusions creates a slippery slope that 24 undermines the distinctions such provisions are intended to create.

26
27

---

<sup>3</sup>Business risks were described by the court as risks of injury to persons or property caused by faulty products 28 or workmanship. Hurtig, 692 P.2d at 1155.

Professional-Services Exclusion

[24] The professional-services exclusion present in the Isle of Palms case reads as follows: "[a]ll coverage is excluded hereunder for claims arising out of the rendering or failure to render any professional service by any Insured or any Additional Named Insured." 459 S.E.2d at 320. The court in Isle of Palms had previously defined a professional act or service as:

one arising out of a vocation, calling, occupation, or employment involving specialized knowledge, labor, a skill, and the labor or skill involved is predominantly mental or intellectual rather than physical or manual . . . . In determining whether a particular act is of a professional nature or a "professional service" we must look not to the title or character of the party performing the act, but to the act itself.

Id. at 321. Although training and licensing are required to practice pest control, the above definition would likely place extermination outside the ambit of the professional-services exception.

[25] However, Yasuda argues that the professional-services exclusion is not ambiguous and that the term professional services is not limited to those traditionally recognized professions such as law or medicine. In Hollingsworth, the court addressed the issue of what constituted "professional services." 208 Cal. App. 3d at 803. Hollingsworth involved a claim of negligent ear-piercing, allegedly performed by the insured as a service offered in a retail cosmetic store. Id. The court granted summary judgment in favor of the insurer, finding that coverage was excluded under the professional services exclusion of the policy. Id. The insured argued that because ear-piercing was not state regulated, nor did it require licensing, it did not qualify as a "professional service" that would fall under the exclusion. Id. at 806.

[26] The court held that the conclusion was based on three separate factors. First, the court considered a plain reading and understanding of the language of the provision itself. Id. Secondly, the court noted case law indicating that in an insurance contract the language must be "construed in the context of the instrument as a whole, and in the circumstances of the case, and cannot be found to be ambiguous in the abstract." Id. at 807. Lastly, the court attempted to balance the interests of the parties, giving weight to the insured's reasonable expectations of coverage and the insurer's right

3 to limit the extent of the policy's coverage when plain language has been used to do so. Id. The 4 court further expressed the desire not to rewrite an insurance contract to force inclusion of coverage 5 not contemplated. Id.

6 [27] In the case at bar, this court must decide whether the term “professional services”, in the 7 contract of this insurance contract, is properly applied to pest extermination services. In the 8 instant case, the exclusion reads as follows:

9 This insurance shall not apply to bodily or property damage to

- 10 A. the rendering of or failure to render (1) medical, surgical, dental, x-ray or 11 nursing service or treatment, or the furnishing of food or beverages in 12 connection therewith; (2) any service or treatment conducive to health or of 13 a professional nature; (3) any cosmetic or tonsorial service or treatment; 14 B. the furnishing or dispensing of drugs or medical, or surgical supplies or 15 appliances.
16 C. the rendering of or failure to render any cosmetic, ear piercing, tonsorial 17 massage, physiotherapy, chiropody, hearing aid, optical or optometrical 18 services or treatments.
19 D. the rendering of or failure to render any professional services

20 [28] This court chooses to adopt a definition of professional services which stays truer to a literal 21 interpretation of the language--the rendering of services professionally. The distinction drawn is that 22 of the professional versus the amateur, an example which Justice Weeks alluded to in oral 23 arguments. For example, in the world of sports there are professional athletes, who are paid for their 24 services, and there are amateur athletes, who are unpaid. This is not to say that had Heights, as a 25 professional service provider, not charged the homeowners for services rendered that Heights would 26 not be considered to have engaged in professional services. Getting paid is not the issue, but rather 27 the status of the service provider as one generally paid for rendering such services. If, for example, 28 one has a business license allowing one to be paid for such services, one would be considered a professional service provider. Unlike the Isle of Palms court, this court views the status of the service provider as having weight equal to that of the service or act provided.

[29] Accordingly, the court determines that the trial court made a proper legal determination as to what constitutes professional services which we now adopt, subject to the clarification noted above.

4 CONCLUSION

5 [30] In summary, we conclude the trial court properly found this case to be appropriate for 6 summary judgment. A general liability insurance policy is meant to be just that, a policy for general 7 liability, and not a policy which protects against all possible risks. The precise reason that 8 performance bonds and errors and omissions policies exist is to cover specified risks which a general 9 liability policy will not. Both the professional-services and work product exclusions were 10 unambiguous and wholly effective. We have construed the professional services exclusion to 11 include the services which Heights performed. Therefore, we must affirm the trial court's decision 12 granting summary judgment in favor of Yasuda. Affirmed.
